

3-28-16 Worst place to live

Last year, when The Washington Post used a computer program to rate every county in the U.S. based on its scenery and climate, Red Lake County in Minnesota came in dead last. Christopher Ingraham, who wrote the story, called the county “the absolute worst place to live in America.”

Well, residents of Red Lake County did not agree! They bombarded his e-mail inbox and Twitter feed with scenic photographs from their county.

In response, Ingraham agreed to visit Red Lake County, and he fell in love with the place. Now get this – he and his family are moving there in May.

Talk about a change of heart! Just more proof that computer data just can’t capture the beauty of God’s creation.

Just a thought. I’m Sid Batts from First Presbyterian Church in downtown Greensboro, on North Elm Street overlooking Fisher Park, fpcgreensboro.org.
